I was surprised when the man opposite me in the train said he did not smoke and that he couldn't give me a light. I had been admiring the fine lighter which he had on the table by the Window. We were now approaching the borders and the conversation on the customs examination we were soon to undergo was becoming quite heated. We had been given forms to fill in, and the lady beside was arguing that a fur coat which had been worn three times was a used article. Everybody joined in the conversation except the man opposite me who kept looking out of the window. I was just trying to get some sleep when an official came to our compartment and asked for passports. He collected them, stamped them and handed them back to us. He had no sooner left, than the customs officers entered. They were extremely polite. They opened just one or two cases. Which they didn't examine very thoroughly and then asked each of us how much money we had with us and requested to see it. I learned afterwards that large sums of money were being smuggled out of the country. The officers were preparing to leave when one of them picked up the cigarette-lighter to light his pipe. The man opposite me said that the lighter was broken. The officer replied jokingly that was why the man had probably no cigarettes to declare. The man became embarrassed.
